

Maternal Interview Preparatory Guide

During the maternal interview, we will ask questions about your health before, during, and after your pregnancy with your child and about the health of your child after birth. For example, we will be asking you about conditions you and your child might have had, medications you and your child might have taken, and other treatments and procedures you and your child might have undergone. We will also be asking a few questions about your child's biological father.

We know that it might be hard to remember certain events and the names of certain medications and treatments that you and your child might have taken. This preparatory guide is designed to help you remember those things. The interviewer will ask you to look at the lists in this guide in case you cannot remember. The interviewer will tell you which list to look at to help you answer a question. The lists do not include all conditions, medications, and treatments. Please tell the interviewer if you or your child were diagnosed with a condition, took a medication, or had a treatment that is not on one of the lists.

Please try to have this guide handy during your interview. The interview will go much faster if you can refer to it during the interview. Without the guide, it might take as long as 2 hours to go through the interview.

Some of the questions in the interview refer to the time period 3 months before pregnancy through the end of breastfeeding (if you breastfed). Thus, we have also included a Pregnancy Reference Form with specific dates that should approximately correspond to your pregnancy. We used the information you provided in the last telephone interview to complete this form.

PLEASE NOTE: While it is important for you to have this guide and the Pregnancy Reference Form available to you during the interview, you DO NOT need to spend any time reviewing these materials before we call. We will walk you through everything during the interview and do not want to burden you with any additional preparation time.

Thank you again for taking part in the Maternal Interview.
